1 次の英文を読んで、あとの設問に答えなさい。（*印のある語は 注 を参考にしなさい）

“Who is the new girl in the class?” asked Miriam in the *locker room of the Oakdale High School.

“Her name is Pierson. She’s very quiet and shy when she reads the textbook in class, but I’m sure she’s all right,” said Nora.

“She is very clever,” said Grace suddenly. “She made no mistakes in her French lesson.”

“Well, I don’t like her,” said Miriam. “I never believe those little things. And, her clothes are the worst in....”

“ あ ,” said Jessica, and touched a finger to her mouth. “Here she is.”

A little girl entered the room when Miriam stopped <sup>①</sup> (speak). But Jessica stopped Miriam too late. The girl’s face was red and she went out.

“ A , Miriam,” said Nora.

“Well, what difference does it make?” answered Miriam. “Miss Pierson wears the same dress again and again every day. We can’t invite <sup>②</sup> a girl like that to our class parties. We won’t enjoy the party if she comes.”

“Miriam,” said Grace quietly, “We all have the right to invite anyone we like. I’m going to give the tea party next Saturday. I will follow Miss Pierson and invite her to the party.”

<sup>③</sup> The two girls looked into each other’s faces for a moment. They were always *rivals at school.

“We should hurry,” said Jessica. “Nobody knows Miss Pierson’s house exactly, so if we can’t catch her....”

The three of the girls hurried out of the locker room. When they came to a *cross street, Miss Pierson was walking slowly to a street along the river. When she entered a small house on the street, the girls knew she really was very poor. They walked to the front door. Grace *knocked on it. It <sup>④</sup> (open) by Miss Pierson herself. She was so surprised.

“Please don’t be afraid,” said Nora.

“We’ve come here to make friends with you,” said Jessica.

“We got angry at Miriam. I hope you are all right,” said Grace.

Miss Pierson's expression became soft.

Grace took her hand kindly and said, "You left school so quickly this afternoon and I didn't have a chance to see you.           B          ."

"Will you come in?" said Miss Pierson, and opened the door, and they entered the living room.

"Anne!" called a voice.

"Yes, mother, I'm coming," answered the girl, and hurried out of the room. In a few moments she was back again.

"I'm sorry," she said. "My mother has trouble with her legs and always needs my sister or me."

"Anne, you know my friends, Jessica Bright and Nora O'Malley, don't you? And I am Grace Harlowe," said Grace.

"Oh, yes," answered Anne with a smile. "I knew your names when our teachers called you in class."

"But I think we should be better friends. I'm going to give a tea party to our class next Saturday afternoon. Will you come with Jessica and Nora and me?"

Anne said nothing for a moment. Then her eyes were filled with tears, so the girls were afraid she was crying.

"I'm sorry," said Anne, "but I am afraid I can't come. I must   v  ."

"Excuse me, Anne," said a voice at the door, "I heard Miss Harlowe wanted to invite you to a tea party."

"This is my sister, Mary," said Anne.

"Anne imagines she can't go, but of course she can," said Anne's sister. "I can take care of my mother while she is out."

"But, Mary ...," said Anne.

"Don't worry, Anne," said Mary, "it will be all right. Miss Harlowe, what time must she be there?"

"At four o'clock," answered Grace. "          C          . Remember, Anne, your job is to make and carry the tea. The other girls are going to help with the sandwiches and ice cream."

Miriam Nesbit came to the party late with her two friends. A few minutes later, Grace came in with a little old lady and gave her a seat for the most important guest.

"Girls," said Grace, "I don't think I have to introduce you to Mrs. Gray, the *sponsor for the first year class."

Everyone there laughed and started conversation again. Anne was standing outside the party room and looking at the little old lady in the room with Jessica.

"Why is she the sponsor of the class?" Anne asked.

"Oh, have you never heard?" said Jessica. "Mrs. Gray's daughter <sup>⑤</sup>(die) during her first year at High School long ago, and since then, Mrs. Gray has given a prize of twenty-five dollars to the girl who makes the highest grade in the examinations at the end of the first year. She became the sponsor about ten years ago, so each year, when school opens, someone of the first year students gives a tea party and invites her to meet the new girls. You must come in and meet her, too."

"Twenty-five dollars," said Anne.

"For a perfect examination she gives one hundred dollars. But, of course, no one has ever <sup>⑥</sup>(win) the hundred," said Jessica.

"One hundred dollars!" said Anne. "          D          !"

"Well, you may win the twenty-five dollars, anyway, Anne," said Jessica.

Mrs. Gray said, "And now, young ladies, who is the best in the class now? <sup>⑦</sup>Are you, Grace?"

"No, Mrs. Gray," she answered. "I have studied hard, but I think I like basketball too much."

"That's OK. But then, who is the best in the class now?"

"Miriam Nesbit," said several voices.

"Ah!" said Mrs. Gray and looked at Miriam. "So you are the gold medal girl, Miriam? I'm happy you've become such a nice girl! But you must not study too hard."

"          E          , Mrs. Gray," answered Miriam. "My lessons give me very little trouble."

"Mrs. Gray," said Nora, "Miriam Nesbit is also an excellent girl, but the first girl has studied harder than the great Miriam Nesbit."

Miriam's face became red.

“And who is that, my dear?” said Mrs. Gray.

“It’s Anne Pierson” answered Nora.

“Anne Pierson?” said the little old lady. “Where is the wonderful young woman who is better than our great Miriam? I really want to see her.”

“Anne Pierson, Anne Pierson!” called several voices. Then Grace found Anne outside the party room and took her to Mrs. Gray.

“Don’t worry, my dear,” said Mrs. Gray. Then she tried to look at Anne’s red face.

“I’m really happy to meet you because I hear you are a nice rival of the excellent girl in the first year class, and because you have the name I love best in the world.”

Here the old lady’s voice became very soft, and the girls remembered her daughter’s name, う, the girl who passed away in her first year when she was sixteen.
