Mom went shopping, so she left Jane Gladys, her daughter, in the room. The little girl enjoyed ①(be) alone. She began to read a book which was bought by her father. Soon the door opened and closed again, quietly. She looked up and was surprised to find a strange man in the middle of the room.

He had a hat in one hand and a book in the other.

“Excuse me, are you Jane Gladys Brown?” he asked.

“Yes,” she answered.

“Very good!” he said. “I am Peter. A ”

“How did you come in?” asked Jane Gladys.

“I cannot answer,” he said.

“What do you want?” she asked.

“Ah! — now we are coming to business,” said the man. “Your father has *abused me terribly.”

Jane Gladys got off the window and pointed to the door.

“Leave this room soon!” she cried. “My papa is the best man in the world. He has never abused anybody!” ② The visitor said, “Your father may be very kind to you. You are his little girl. But when he’s in his office, he is not kind to anyone. I visited him the other day and said he should buy the ‘Complete Works of Peter Smith.’ What did he do? Can you guess?”

She said nothing. The man was ③(excite) and continued, “He said I should leave his office and go outside the building. What do you think of such *treatment from the best papa in the world?”

Jane Gladys said, “ B ”

“Oh, you do? Well,” said the man, “Your father is big and strong and a dangerous man. I have decided to do a thing.”

“What are you going to do?” she asked.

“I’m going to give you this book,” he answered.

“I’ll write your name in it. How do you *spell Gladys?”

“G-L-A-D-Y-S,” she answered.

“Thank you. Now this is my *revenge for your father’s treatment of me. He’ll be sorry he didn't buy the book. Good-bye." He laughed and left the room.

When the door closed behind the little man, the child^④ sat down in the window again and looked at the book. It had a red and yellow *cover. Then she opened it and found her name on the first white *page.

"He was a funny little man," she said to herself.

She turned the next page, and saw a big picture of a *clown. He wore green and red and yellow clothes. When she looked at this, the book *trembled in her hands. Suddenly the clown jumped out of it and stood on the floor beside her.

"This is better! I am very tired. I stood very long on a page," he said.

Jane Gladys was very surprised to see him. When he turned around to look at the room, Jane Gladys was surprised and laughed.

"Why are you laughing?" the clown asked.

"The back of you is all white!" cried the girl. "You're only a clown in front of you."

"Yes," he answered. "The artist made a front view of me. He did not make the back of me. That was against the page of the book."

"But it makes you so funny!" said Jane Gladys. She laughed a lot.

The clown looked angry and sat down on a chair so she couldn't see his back.

"I'm not the only thing in the book," he said.

She remembered to turn another page, and she found that it had the picture of a monkey^(あ). It sat on the window seat beside her.

"He-he-he-he-he!" cried the monkey. "This is a lot of fun! Now I can be a real monkey, not a picture of one."

"Real monkeys can't talk," said Jane Gladys.

"How do you know? Have you ever been one yourself?"^(v) asked the animal.

The girl was very surprised. Jane Gladys looked from one to the other, and turned another page of the book. The monkey jumped and ran away. The clown was afraid.

The *leopard was on the chair and looked at each of them.

"Which of us are you going to *attack first?" the monkey asked.

"I can't attack any of you," cried the leopard. "The artist made my mouth closed, so I do not have any teeth. He forgot to make my *claws. But everyone is afraid of me."

The clown laughed and said, " C But you have no teeth. You have no claws, so we are not afraid of you." The leopard was so angry.

Just then she dropped the book, and when she tried to catch it, one of the pages near the back opened. She saw a bear in the page. It was looking at her.

"Now," cried the leopard, "You can't laugh at him. The bear has both claws and teeth."

"Yes," said the bear, "And I know how to use them, too. If you read in that book, you'll find I'm a very *cruel bear. My only business in life is to eat up little girls!"

"Why did the writer make you so hungry for girls? Do you also eat animals?"

"The writer does not say anything about this," said the bear.

"Very good. You can begin eating Jane Gladys first. She laughed because I had no back," said the clown.

"But ^⑤you laughed at me because I didn't have claws or teeth!" the leopard said. "Do you think you will try to eat a clown and a monkey after you finish the girl?"

"Perhaps so," said the bear. "I am very hungry. I will begin to eat the little girl first, because the writer says I like girls the best."

Jane was surprised to hear this, and she began to notice the thing which ^⑥the man meant when he said he gave her the book.

The bear stood up and said, "Now I will eat the little girl."

He walked slowly to Jane Gladys, and the monkey, the leopard, and the clown all stood around and watched the bear.

But before the bear reached her, the child cried out, "Stop! D I think it is wrong."

"Why?" asked the bear, in surprise.

^⑦"Because you're mine." The book was given to me. My name is on the front page," she answered.

"Can you all read?" he asked.

"I can," said the clown.

"Is her name really in the book?"

The clown picked it up and looked at the name.

"Yes," he said. "JANE GLADYS BROWN was ^⑧(write) here."

"Then, of course, I can't eat her," the bear decided. "That writer is as *disappointing as most writers are."

"But he's better than the artist," cried the monkey.

"You should stay in the book," she said.

The animals looked at each other.

"Really —" began the bear, and then he stopped talking.

"It's Mom!" cried Jane Gladys. "She's come home at last!"

Jane Gladys' strange animals all disappeared.
